It was deceifful and dishonest, dangerous to the public bealth; it brought scandal and disgrace upon the mayor, cor-poration and all the inhabitants of the city that a Londoner should behave so. After the investigation he was found guilty and condemned to be taken, with his bad meat carried in front of him, to the pillory in Cornhill, and while he stood therein the carrion he tried to sell was burned under it is well known that the pillory was an instrument in which the culprit was fixed, incapable of movement, and exposed to the contempt of the people. The offense of the culprit was always publicly proclaimed, and, according to the views of the spectators. the punishment might be severe or other-wise. If they disliked the offense of the offender their contempt would take the pro-verbia; and forcible form of rotten eggs tnd dead cats, and the trader would make a closer acquaintance with his own wares, both raw and cooked, than he might find

A publican, convicted of selling unsound and unwholesome red wine, was sentenced to drink a draught of the same stuff which he sold to the common people, the remain-der being poured on his head, and com-pelled to forswear the calling of a vint-ner in the city of London forever, unless The Hon. It was a common practice to put some sort of evergreen leaves in the bottom of tankards—hence the proverb, "Good wine needs no bush." Her sentence was to stand in the "thew," or female pillory, with half of the pot ab-tached to it. As far as possible the cause of the offense was always exhibited along with the person punished. Severe punishment was meted out for endeavoring to raise the standard market for enhancing the price of his own property. He secretly employed a man to bring certain of his own (the merchant's) wheat to the market, whereupon he bought his own at 2 pence more per bushel than the market price, of course taking care to make the same well known, forgetting, however, to state what he knew about the seller.

Ladies had bees in their bonnets and gentlemen found their hats turned into striking likenesses of "Catch-'em-alive-oh's." Some of the swarm settled on the cold salmon and other members of it inmbled into the champagne cap. In fact, the beescreated the greatest consternation among the ladies and gentlemen in that quarter of the grounds.

They were gradually drawn off the lancheen party by a gentleman, to whom occurred the happy idea of treating them to a little masic on a metal tray under a tree. After the tapping or tinkling on the article that continued for two or three moments the queen bee settled on the branches above to listen to it, and was at once followed by all the swarm. It was branches above to listen to it, and was at once followed by all the swarm. It was an extraordinary sight to see hundreds of the insects hanging like great black and gold clusters on the tree while the tinkling continued. It ceased with the luncheou, and the bees did no more harm. In the earlier part of the performance a lady was pretty severely stung.
